While the memo does not apply to the private sector, it includes useful information relating to information security, including a security checklist for the protection of information on remote devices, such as laptops, that has been published by the National Institute of Standards and Technology. In addition to recommending that federal departments and agencies utilize the checklist, the memorandum recommends that they take the following actions: ☐ Encrypt all sensitive data on mobile computers and devices; ☐ Allow remote access only with two-factor authentication where one of the factors is provided by a device separate from the computer gaining access; ☐ Use a "time-out" function for remote access and mobile devices, which requires user re- authentication after 30 minutes of inactivity; and 2 ☐ Log all computer-readable data extracts from databases holding sensitive information and verify each extract that includes sensitive data has been erased within 90 days or its use is still required.
